Andrea Stauber is a partner in King & Spalding's International Arbitration and Construction Disputes practice groups, based in London.

Andrea focuses on complex international commercial disputes, particularly in the construction, engineering, infrastructure and energy sectors. She has advised owners and developers, main contractors, subcontractors and consultants on a variety of major projects, including roads, airports, power plants, oil and gas processing facilities, wind farms and chemical plants. She currently advises clients across Europe, Asia, Australia, the U.S. and Africa.

Andrea regularly represents clients in international arbitration under ICC, LCIA, SIAC, AAA and UNCITRAL rules. She is experienced in litigation, adjudication, mediation and expert determination. In addition, she provides strategic risk management and pragmatic dispute avoidance advice throughout the execution phase of projects, with a view to achieving commercial solutions in line with clients' business needs.

Andrea had the opportunity to complete a secondment with a multi-national joint venture, during which she provided ongoing advice to project teams and management about contract administration, dispute avoidance and dispute resolution in relation to the construction of a combined-cycle power plant within a LNG facility.
